Sunny Dooley is a Navajo (Dine’) storyteller from a community called Chi Chil’ Tah (Where the Oaks Grow). Her family name is that of the bluebird, Dohlee. With a degree in Communications from Brigham Young University, she was awarded the honor of Miss Navajo Nation in 1982. She learned storytelling from her mother, who had received instruction from her great grandmother. The stories she tells have been passed down for generations among her matrilineal Saltwater People Clan. She is the first of her extended family to recite such narratives in both Navajo and English. Having Dine’ as her first language, Ms. Dooley interprets her People’s stories in English with all of their rich cultural, traditional, and historical context, making her a cultural ambassador between Navajo and non-Navajo worlds.
